

I would like to express my concern over the FCC's intent to expand Low Power FM (LPFM) services. As I understand it these LPFM stations would have priority over already existing FM translator services. I listen to a listener-supported Christian radio station in San Antonio, K-LOVE 91.3. It offers a positive, encouraging, commercial-free alternative to the overwhelming numbers of secular music stations on the air in San Antonio. As I travel across Texas I am also able to tune into the local K-LOVE station and receive the same positive message. The message being spread by K-LOVE is one of hope. It is family friendly, broadcasts public service announcements for events in my area and presents news I can use. I cannot see anything positive about forcing stations like K-LOVE off the air. Please consider leaving the rules concerning LPFM as they are and keep positive influences like K-LOVE on the air.
Thanks.
